What are cookies?

Cookies are small text files that sites visited by the user send to the browser (Internet Explorer, Mozilla Firefox, Google Chrome, Opera, etc.), where they are stored before being re-transmitted to the same sites at the next visit by the same user.

When navigating through a site, the user can receive on his/her terminal also cookies from sites or Web servers other than those visited (the so-called "third party" cookies). This is because the website visited can have elements like, for example, pictures, maps, sounds, social buttons (Facebook's "Like", Google's "+1", etc.) and specific links to web pages of other domains residing on servers other than the one hosting the requested page. In other words, these are cookies that are set by a different website and not by the one that one is currently visiting.

Technical cookies are those used for the sole purpose of "carrying out the transmission of a communication over an electronic communications network or strictly necessary for a service provider in the information company explicitly required by the subscriber or user to provide that service" (see also art. 122, paragraph 1 of the Code).

Profiling cookies are those used to create profiles related to the user and send advertising messages in line with the preferences shown by the same user through his/her surfing habits. They are mentioned in Article 122 of the Code, which states that "the storage of information in the terminal equipment of a contractor or a user or the access to information already stored, is only allowed on condition that the contractor or the user has given consent after being informed through the simplified procedures referred to in Article 13, paragraph 3" (Art. 122, paragraph 1 of the Code).
